Friday, November 10, 2016 MANILA, Philippines — After a series of bomb threats last week, the Department of Justice (DOJ) ordered the evacuation of the Commission on Elections (Comelec) office and the National Prosecution Office (NPA) in Camp Crame. ADVERTISEMENT Comelec's deputy election supervisor Bella Maglaya called the orders "a solution to a problem that should not be there in the first place." "The problem really is not the bombs," Maglaya said in a radio interview Thursday. Maglaya said the evacuation and evacuation orders were ordered at the behest of the National Intelligence Coordinating Agency, which said it received reports of threats based on the "suspicious behavior" of people showing up at the camp. "I'm just really frustrated that the government orders come at the expense of the peace of mind of the millions of people voting," Maglaya said. "I hope the people living in the area get to finish their work for the day and leave." Maglaya noted that she has had to put up with such inconveniences before, such as when the camps were used to evacuate people in connection with oil slicks in the Pasig River. Comelec maintains the evacuation orders are a "preventative measure." The NPA moved to Camp Crame after it was tasked by the DOJ to assist in the investigation of the illegal bombing of the convoy of Maguindanao Rep. Kian Loyd Delos Santos in November 2012, which killed three people, including one of his bodyguards. ADVERTISEMENT The Comelec and the NPA are expected to reopen on Nov. 14, on Nov. 21 and Nov. 24. The NPA is also expected to resume on Nov. 28, and Dec. 5 and Dec. 9. Contacted for comment, Comelec spokesperson James Jimenez said the "zero tolerance policy of the Comelec for the prevention and investigation of any threats against the Comelec's facilities, personnel and voters will be maintained." "However, given the large volume of threats, there will be unwarranted inconveniences to the Comelec's normal operations," Jimenez added. In their joint statement on Nov. 9

Exploring the psychometric properties of instruments to measure the cognitive executive control of patients with schizophrenia. The cognitive executive control (CEC) of patients with schizophrenia is reduced. This is associated with impaired functionality, social life, and long-term survival. The assessment of CEC may therefore be of importance. Several instruments have been developed to measure CEC. However, these instruments have not been examined thoroughly for psychometric properties. To validate the Psychosocial Assessment of the Cognitive Executive Control (PACEC) and the Cognitive Facial Expressivity (CFPE). A randomised, crossover validation study was conducted with healthy controls, patients with schizophrenia, and patients with affective disorder. The discriminative ability between healthy controls and patients with schizophrenia was examined using receiver operating characteristic (ROC) analysis, and the ability to differentiate between patients was assessed using an area under the ROC curve (AUC). The discriminative power and the ability to differentiate between patients and controls as assessed by the AUC of the PACEC was higher than that of the CFPE. For the assessment of cognitive executive control in patients with schizophrenia and affective disorder, the PACEC is preferable to the CFPE.*a - 108 = 2*y - 0*a. Let m = 4 + -1.
